

NOTES THE CONTRIBUTORS

CRAIG C. DOWNER is a wildlife ecologist and president of the non-profit Andean Tapir Fund / Wild Horse and Burro Fund based in Minden, Nevada. He has conducted pioneer telemetric studies of the Endangered Mountain/Andean Tapir, written and published peer-reviewed articles, chapters and reports on this species and given presentations at professional and popular conferences (both English and Spanish) as an IUCN SSC Tapir Specialist Group member. As a 4th generation Nevadan, he grew up in western Nevada and eastern California riding his wonderful horse Poco and has written books, including The Wild Horse Conspiracy, articles and given numerous talks concerning North America's wild horse and burro herds and habitats that are legally established under the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act now at its fiftieth anniversary but whose true intent -- along with the wild herds -- needs restoring.

CHRISTINE REED is Emeritus Professor in the School of Public Administration, University of Nebraska at Omaha, where she has taught and published in the areas of public law and policy, as well as environmental ethics. Her recent publications on wild horse protection policies include articles in the International Journal of Public Administration, Environmental Values, Society & Animals, and Ethics & Environment, as well as her book, Saving the Pryor Mountain Mustang: A Legacy of Local and Federal Cooperation by University of Nevada Press. Christine has three equine partners, and is also a wild horse photographer. Her photographs can be seen at <https://stillwildhorses.zenfolio.com>.
